FOREWORD

IN presenting a series of foreign trade directories to the business interests of the United States, it is the purpose of the National Business League of America to encourage a correspondence between the American producer and selling agencies of other countries, as the first practical step for the enlargement of our foreign markets.

It is not expected, however, that publications of this kind will directly benefit the great industrial enterprises having their representatives and distributing branches located in all the chief commercial centers of the world; but it is hoped that, to the manufacturer whose facilities for production exceed the demand of his home markets, or who finds himself burdened with a surplus output, these suggestions will prove a valuable factor in the securing of successful results.

During the ebb-tides of trade, those periods of depression and uncertainty when men hedge and hesitate, the fact remains that, no matter what the status of business here in the United States, markets will be profitable and the currents of traffic run full and freely in many foreign countries; therefore if we would prosper evenly and continuously we must secure that prosperity through direct commercial relations with the men of affairs in other lands, instead of attempting to sell our surplus products by proxy, through agents of competing countries. With this end in view the League is earnestly directing its efforts in various channels.

These directories, and others to follow, have been prepared with great care and thoroughness by American consular officials, for the use of this League, and forwarded through the courtesy of the State Department at Washington. Acknowledgments are hereby cordially made to Consuls-General Silas C. McFarland, Herman R. Dietrich, Consul John B. Terres, and all other consular officers who contributed these valuable suggestions and compilations. By comparative statements of exports and imports the proportional trade interests of competing nations are made plain; obstacles to our commercial advancement are pointed out, and methods clearly submitted for the promotion of American commerce with the countries in question.

The League has made no attempt at commercial ratings. That has been left to R. G. Dun & Company, a mercantile agency that has branches in all parts of the world, and is adequately equipped to furnish reliable information as to the responsibility of foreign dealers.

SWITZERLAND

INTRODUCTION BY

SILAS C. McFARLAND

AMERICAN CONSUL-GENERAL AT ST. GALL

Without going into general statistics farther than necessary and otherwise available, Switzerland, as a commercial proposition and so far as American interests are concerned, can be summarized by a few comparisons and statements. Its total population is 3,315,443. Of this total, 375,294 are contained in the 21 towns of over 10,000 population covered by this directory, chief among which, and from which only in the American sense of the word general wholesaling is done, are Zurich, with 176,000; Basel, 130,000, and Geneva, 116,387. The remaining population, outside of the 21 towns mentioned, is distributed in towns and villages of less than 10,000. As a whole, the Swiss population is the most discriminating and up-to-date of any in Europe. Per capita, it imports, exports and consumes more than the people of any other European country, England not excepted. Intrinsically it is poor in everything except scenery, which pays a large annual dividend, and paid largely by Americans, and in the industry and integrity of its people, which have not only developed every natural resource, but, importing raw materials, have transformed a grazing and limited fruit region into a manufacturing proposition. Its mountains yield neither minerals, coal nor even a fair quality of building stone. Its iron and cotton and raw materials generally are imported, as is its furnace coal. But its people are educated and wideawake. Every male must not only serve in the army of defense, under regulations, however, far different from those imposed by neighboring monarchies, but before doing so must pass a thorough educational test, failure being punished. Its high standard of citizenship, applied to industrial and commercial pursuits, has not only developed a necessity for all of the better things of life, but created a discriminating knowledge of the best and cheapest methods to obtain them. Swiss shops, even in the villages, are filled with the best products of the world—the best, the latest, from every country. Such a market is only to be reached through the most practical and intelligent methods.

In 1906 Swiss imports were $283,528,483.11, of which Germany contributed $92,543,162.83, largely manufactures, and the United States $11,287,192.17, largely raw materials—a percentage of 32.60 for Germany and of 3.48 for the United States. Of Swiss exports, Germany takes about 25% and the United States about 12%—over half of the latter represented by St. Gall embroideries, made upon Manchester and Nottingham foundations from American cotton. Swiss import figures as to weights, but not as to values, are now available for the first nine months of 1907, and a comparison of American imports during the corresponding months of 1906 illuminates the present status of trade. The figures are for quintals, gross weight, a quintal being equal to 220 pounds:

Importations, by Quintals, for the First Nine Months of 1906 and 1907 Compared.

Syrups	15,578	98,159
Ham	801	8,569
Meats (chiefly canned)	3,250	5,237
Lard	12,704	14,563
Oleomargarine	1,125	2,073
Tobacco, unmanufactured	30,443	32,923
Shoes	85	134
Rubber shoes	387	323
Cotton, raw	91,319	100,617
Petroleum	339,727	396,059
Resinous products	17,139	31,176
Miscellaneous machinery	4,960	5,653
Agricultural machinery	3,793	8,364

The increase shown by these figures—practically the first increase shown since 1898, when the American import percentage was about 7%—was due rather to the very prosperous times in Switzerland up to the occurrence of the American financial disturbance than to any betterment of trade relations. Eliminate from the above the items of cotton, tobacco, petroleum and other practically raw products, and the showing of manufactured articles is not flattering. Nor can the situation be fully disclosed without a consideration of the growth of Swiss manufactures and commerce in the past few years. That growth has been phenomenal, and can be illustrated by export figures on machinery. In 1890, such Swiss exports were, in round figures, $4,500,000; in 1906, $12,700,000, embracing heavy, textile and electrical machinery of all sorts. For instance, Switzerland, in 1903, imported automobiles to the value of $1,307,961 and exported $213,458. In 1906, while her imports were $2,633,485, her exports rose to $1,691,645, and Swiss autos, as well as Swiss heavy, electrical and textile machinery, were displayed to customers in permanent general agencies in the principal markets of the continent—Milan, Berlin, Vienna, Paris and London. In the period mentioned, imports of American automobiles fell from $51,000 to $21,000. With similar progress in other lines of manufacture, it is obvious that the American exporter must reckon closely with local Swiss production. That day is past when the label "American" presumed novelty and superior merit. Two illustrations will suffice: Eight years ago American office furniture was a novelty and in vogue. One concern, especially, built up a large trade. But there was constant friction—failure to supply orders promptly and exactly, lamentable failures in packing, constant disagreement over matters of discount, payments, exchange and breakage. That concern today is operating one of the largest factories in Switzerland, turning out its own goods but copying American styles and novelties. American shoes, although never practically nor thoroughly placed on the market in distinctive fashion, were not long ago a popular craze, and, for that matter, are still in demand; but the largest shoe concern in Switzerland, operating largely with American machines and findings, using American lasts and frankly advertising American styles, supplements similar concerns in Italy and Austria in supplying the market with "American" shoes of very good quality. The American manufacturer of today must expect to find duplicates of his own goods, in all standard lines, manufactured by European workmen at European wages, and know that, for such a market as Switzerland, his German, French, Austrian, Italian, Belgian and English competitors possess those other prime advantages of contiguity, of comparatively cheap and direct freights, of a knowledge of local commercial usages, and of doing business in the languages and values of the local market.

The purpose of this directory is to give such exact and detailed information regarding Swiss wholesale and retail concerns and agencies, and certain lines of manufacture, stating the business language of each district, with comment and suggestion by consular officers, as to open the way to American exporters for direct business negotiations. Generally speaking, the business language of East Switzerland is German, of the west, French, and of the extreme south, Italian, but business correspondence can be conducted in German. Catalogues, and especially printed instructions and advertisements accompanying goods destined for the retail trade, appear in the three languages, whether of local or continental origin, and always in Swiss values. American catalogues, quoting prices in American values, are in the main worthless. And outside of standard goods, with recognized grades, or such as can be satisfactorily sampled, catalogues even in German are wholly introductory. This is especially true of machinery of whatever character. Neither Germany, monopolizing 75% of machine imports, nor any other continental seller, would think of relying wholly upon such methods. Wherever necessary, depots are maintained, and, otherwise, competent men constantly travel the territory. Prices in francs, Swiss delivery, are quoted at once upon request, thus avoiding for the small, isolated or uninformed customer all annoyances regarding unknown freights and tariffs. Usual terms are three months' time or an equivalent discount. The market is systematically studied, and cultivated with a persistency that seems never to tire. Advertising is extensively used and the follow-up system of letter circulars very generally utilized.

The greatest obstacles to American trade are uncertainty as to time and method of delivery and attendant costs, with frequently mail drafts against freight bills of lading. Prices quoted f. o. b. in American values at some interior American point are simply an exasperation to the general trade. If an American concern finds the Swiss market worthy of exploitation, it must, to be successful, meet in method its German and European competitors. The present small percentage of American trade, excluding raw materials, is due almost entirely to the adoption of such methods by a few American concerns—notably in agricultural machinery, hardware, sewing machines and typewriting machines. The latter, to illustrate, although priced from 20% to 25% above similar German machines, absolutely dominate the market. Leading American makers maintain agencies in all of the principal towns, canvassers cover the territory, material is kept in stock, trial machines are placed upon request, and all business is transacted exactly as if it were of Swiss origin. This method, subject to variation according to goods classification, is the successful method.

BASEL CONSULAR DISTRICT.

Embracing the cantons of Baselstadt, Baselland and Solothurn (Soleure); business language, German. French also employed, and universally understood. Official consular address: To the American Consulate, Basel, Switzerland.

The consular district of Basel apparently offers at this time no especial opportunities for doing American business. The electric tramway lines are being gradually extended into the surrounding country, partly by the city itself and partly by private corporations. The latter have made some effort through this consulate to obtain American rails at a lower price than that at which they are offered by German houses, but so far probably without success. But though no new demand for American goods, and particularly for manufactured articles, has arisen in this intensely industrial part of the world, there is always an eager demand here for our novelties and inventions. Our manufacturers who possess such articles can be sure of a ready market here at good prices, if they will take the pains and incur the expense of properly bringing them to the attention of the people personally or by expert representatives.

CONSULAR DISTRICT BERNE.

The consular district of Berne embraces the three Swiss cantons Berne, Fribourg and Neuchatel. The chief cities and towns are Berne, 75,000 inhabitants in the city proper, and 100,000 with surrounding communities; Chaux de Fonds, the center of the Swiss watch industry, 42,000; Biel, 28,000; Neuchatel, 24,000; Fribourg, 20,000, and Locle, 14,000.

Berne.

In the Cantons Fribourg and Neuchatel, French is spoken, and in the Canton Berne, German. Many firms understand English.

Financial ratings may be obtained from the banks at small cost.

American manufactured goods, such as farming implements, tools, machines, desks, office supplies, typewriters, cash registers, shoes, surgical instruments, etc., are sold in the Berne consular district, but the sale is necessarily limited by the size and population of the country. Several American firms manufacturing typewriters, agricultural implements and cash registers have their own representatives in either Zürich or Berne, and supply the trade directly. Many firms are represented by large houses in Germany, whose agents take orders in Switzerland. Some sell direct to the local dealers. Personal representation is to be preferred, but, when this is not possible, circulars and price lists should be in German or French, the measurements in the metric system, and the prices in francs. Long credits are generally required. Merchants here desire to have prices quoted f. o. b. at some European port rather than f. o. b. New York, as they can more easily compute the cost of landing the goods at Berne from Antwerp or Marseilles than from New York or any other American city. There is no prejudice against American goods.

GENEVA CONSULAR DISTRICT.

Embracing the cantons of Geneva, Vaud and Valais; business language, French; official consular address: To the American Consul, Geneva, Switzerland.

On several occasions, this consulate advocated and is now advocating the establishment in this city of branch offices or shops of solely American products or manufactures, such as boots and shoes, meat preserves, dried fruits, whiskies, motor runabouts, tool machinery, agricultural machines, sewing machines, cash registers, labor-saving devices, groceries, and advertise them extensively. If Americans earnestly desire to extend their trade in this part of the country, they must be prepared to spend some money at first; they also must send a few American commercial travelers with knowledge of the French and German languages. These should, whenever possible, carry with them samples for exhibition, and visit all important firms in this district. It will also in all probability be necessary to comply with the credit system (2 or 3 months net or 1 month with 2% or 3% discount), use the metric system of weights and measures, and mention prices in francs for articles delivered in bond; Geneva, for instance.

A great variety of goods is sold under the mention "American shape," "American pattern," "American fashion," or with American names; boots and shoes especially, also roll-top desks, typewriter supplies, cash registers (there is no shop or agent for the latter in Geneva). American tools and machinery are in high esteem and are widely used here.

Catalogues and price-lists, especially those printed in the English language, are of very little value to the Swiss dealers, who are called upon by agents and representatives of European business houses and manufacturers.

Geneva Consular District.

For motor cars and boats, it would be advisable, even necessary, to make a first show of importance at the spring annual Swiss Exposition, which takes place under the supervision of the "Swiss Automobile Club" in Geneva.

A successful motor runabout manufacturer and a pleasure craft manufacturer should combine in the establishing of a showroom in Geneva, with a workshop, and enough of duplicate parts for replacing defective or worn out pieces at once, if necessary.

It must be borne in mind that it will not be an easy task to introduce American goods here, greatly liked as they should or might be, since so much depends on taste and price, and on the fact that such a variety of goods is obtainable right on the spot from various sources, especially German.

Société Electrique Vevey, Montreux, Territet.

The principal interest and business of Montreux and contiguous territory is the maintenance of hotels. Its shops are almost exclusively designed to supply foreigners resorting to the region with necessities or knick-knacks. None are on a large scale.

It is to be remarked that the largest business establishments of the District of Vevey are manufactories for exportation rather than houses for importation. Such importers as there are obtain their supplies from France or Germany or from Lausanne, which is the distributing center for the Cantons de Vaud and du Valais. As wine growing is the chief industry in both cantons, agricultural implements and machines of the usual character are not greatly in demand. For building enterprises, Swiss manufactures are preferred, as particularly adapted in design and measurement to the systems of construction peculiar to the country. Swiss manufactures are for the most part sufficient and satisfactory for the Vaudois and Valaisans.

In cases when applications have been made to the consular agency by manufacturers of the United States for advice as to the introduction of their manufactures within its district, efforts have been made to find proper agents to act for them; but the agents selected have rarely succeeded in obtaining responses from the manufacturers to their propositions.

GENEVA CONSULAR DISTRICT.

LAUSANNE.

Population, 53,262.

Banks.

Banque Cantonale Vaudoise.
Banque d'Escompte et Depots.

Goods advertised in Lausanne are Swiss, German or English, rather than American. American goods are not placed in the foreground, as in Geneva, where American articles, either genuine or imitated, are often advertised and displayed.

There are, however, quite a number of tools and meat preserves of American origin offered in the shops of Lausanne, usually by retailers. Wholesale houses are few, and the existing ones seem to be less important than those of Geneva.

Lausanne is about half the size of Geneva. Though it has a smaller foreign colony, that colony is chiefly composed of wealthy people and students, which is not the case in Geneva. They are in Lausanne generally for pleasure, health or study, and the shops cater to their tastes or hobbies.

Americans being few, and English numerous, English goods are naturally more in demand.

Lucerne.

The commercial conditions in the Lucerne Consular District, especially in the city of Lucerne, which is the Mecca for American, English and continental tourists during the summer season, warrant a much larger import business from the United States than is shown by the trade statistics.

The records show that over 20,000 Americans visit Lucerne annually, many of whom remain for some time. The demand created by this large contingent for various articles of American manufacture is such as to require dealers to keep in stock many commodities for which there is frequent inquiry. Among these may be mentioned American shoes, toilet articles, medicines and proprietary articles, special food preparations, etc. This demand for American products is supplied in a limited way, but very little of it is imported direct from the United States, the purchases being made through German agents and importing houses, who supply the Swiss trade. By this method the middleman makes a per cent which the American exporter pays, as the Swiss dealers are close buyers.

The same is true in a larger commercial sense. American made hardware, machinery, tools, saws, surgical instruments, typewriting machines, cash registers, sewing machines, office furniture and supplies, etc., find a market in this district, because of their superior merit. But as is the case with the articles previously mentioned, the import business is generally through Germany. This method of reaching the Swiss trade may be illustrated by the fact that of the great number of traveling salesmen licensed in Switzerland last year, only one is credited to America. To meet the demands for American products in Switzerland, and to secure the business on the most profitable basis, will require the same attention to details in studying the conditions, catering to the customs of the country and soliciting the trade that is observed by aggressive manufacturers and wholesale dealers in the United States.

The establishment of general agencies in Europe, where American products for which there is a demand in continental markets can be kept in stock, and through which the trade could be supplied, would seem to offer the best means of securing a large, desirable and profitable business in certain lines, and of supplying it direct. Manufacturers and exporters representing different branches of trade could combine their interests, thereby reducing the cost of maintaining the agencies. Traveling salesmen, with a knowledge of the language of the countries to which they are assigned, could solicit the trade for the several interests represented in the combination, thus bringing the buyer and seller into direct contact. This would do away with the middleman, or selling agents, through whom practically all the American import trade into this consular district now comes. The commissions received by foreign agents on American business in Switzerland are sufficient to pay the expenses of a general agency, and the additional business secured by reason of direct personal solicitation, and sales from samples, would greatly increase the volume of trade and augment the profits on the business of exporters of American goods to Switzerland.

ZURICH CONSULAR DISTRICT.

Embracing the cantons of Zurich, Schwyz, Schaffhausen and Glarus; business language, German; official consular address: To the American Consulate, Zurich, Switzerland.

Zurich, being the largest commercial city in Switzerland, imports, of course, many articles of foreign manufacture. Naturally, many American products have also found their way to this city, but not so much as might be the case if the distance was not so great and so much time lost from the date of giving the order and getting the goods here. But the real reason why more American goods do not find their way into this market is because our people do not pursue the same persistent course as the neighboring countries do. Germany, France, Austria and other countries have their agents visiting this country with samples, and it stands to reason that a personal visit will accomplish more than letters, circulars or catalogues. Most of the business men here are up to date, and are just as willing to buy from Americans as from any other business men if they see equal or better chances. Some of the business men are even anxious to do business in American goods, and it is frequently the case that some call at this consulate for addresses of American manufacturing and exporting firms in certain lines of goods. Naturally trade to this country of very large dimensions can not be expected if one considers how much it is divided up and that the whole of Switzerland has only a population of about as much as New York City.

However, as said before, business in American goods could, in my opinion, certainly be improved, if samples and goods in stock could be shown here. Among the American articles we find in the market here especially are: Hardware and tools, agricultural implements, machinery, dental instruments, office furniture, typewriters, cash registers, leather and leather goods, shoes and supplies, bicycles and supplies, Oldsmobile, canned goods, oils and fats, rubber goods, pianos and organs, garden tools, fountain pens, lumber.

HAITI, WEST INDIES

Introduction by

JOHN B. TERRES
American Consul at Port au Prince

The total value of imports entered at the eleven open ports of Haiti from foreign countries for the fiscal year ended September 30, 1906, amounted to $5,714,830.56, the United States taking the lead in supplying to the value of $3,419,193.84. The remainder is from all other countries combined. Some years ago England and France had the controlling trade, but for the past few years the commerce with the United States has gradually increased until at present it has reached three-fifths of all the imports.

When it is considered that Haiti is by far the most fertile of the West Indian islands, excepting Cuba, the amount of trade is very small and will remain so until she has some of the advantages that the surrounding islands enjoy; that is, foreign capital to aid in developing the many rich resources that exist in the island, and a protection to such investments.

It is not to be supposed that this country will remain in this dormant state for a much longer period, and when a change takes place tending to a betterment of the present stagnated condition, a rapid increase in imports may be expected.

The undeveloped resources are many. That offered by the mineral mines are certainly encouraging for a profitable investment of capital.

The railroad, so far in its infancy, has proved to be nevertheless a success, and the only thing required to increase this popular and necessary mode of transportation is foreign capital; with that aid it would surely be a very profitable enterprise.

Hardwood cutting, cotton raising, fruit growing, sugar-cane cultivation, as well as many other undeveloped products, require capital for their successful exploitation.

To expect any sound financial result from any enterprise, the capital should be employed in the actual working of the enterprise, and not, as has been frequently the case, 10% in the work and 90% extravagantly squandered by the promoters who have succeeded in obtaining valuable concessions which, if they had been properly managed, would have undoubtedly proved a success.

The principal imports from the United States are provisions, such as salt pork, salt beef, salt fish, lard, butter, drygoods, pine lumber, laundry soap, carriages, kerosene oil, hardware, etc., etc., etc.

The exports from this island are cotton, coffee, hardwoods, dry hides, goat skins, wax, honey and like products.

While the merchants doing business with this island have made improvements in their manner of packing goods shipped to this country, there still exists much carelessness, which is a great detriment to our trade, and more strict attention should be given thereto. Only to mention one item, cement, we have lost almost the entire trade, owing to bad packing. I could mention many other articles that arrive in very unsatisfactory condition through carelessness in packing.

Catalogues sent to this consulate to be kept on file should preferably be in the French language, and when such are not available, in English. It would be advisable in sending catalogues to this consulate that seven or eight copies be sent, so that one may be sent to the various consular agencies under its supervision.

There is great neglect on the part of senders of mail matter in failing to place on their correspondence sufficient stamps to pay full foreign postage, whereby the addressee is obliged to pay double postage on such letters.

It is to be hoped that affairs financially will soon take a progressive turn in Haiti which will rapidly augment the trade, and the United States merchants would do well to give satisfaction in their goods and the packing of same, so as to maintain the control of trade which is now in their hands.

JOHN B. TERRES,
American Consul.

ECUADOR, SOUTH AMERICA

Introduction by

HERMAN R. DIETRICH

American Consul-General at Guayaquil

In order to place American exporters in a position to know the names of the different concerns doing business in Ecuador, so that they may have an opportunity to invite their attention to such products of the United States as are consumed in this country, especially to their superiority, when possible, terms, etc., I have prepared a list of the principal firms in Ecuador. I will not attempt a commercial rating of them, but it is presumed that it will serve the purpose of an introductory correspondence, which may finally result in negotiating for more American products.

Something About Ecuador: Tradition teaches that in times of great antiquity the territory which now forms the Republic of Ecuador was divided into several petty and independent kingdoms. One of them, situated on the inter-Andean region and named the Kingdom of Quito, from the people who inhabited it, succeeded, little by little, in extending its limits and becoming the master of its neighbors. In the latter part of the eighth century of the Christian era, an unknown people, who called themselves Caras, made their appearance on large rafts on the Ecuadoran coast and took possession of a portion of it. They settled there and established a regular government, monarchial in form, under the rule of a sovereign called "Scyri," which in their language meant "Lord of All." They worshiped the sun and moon, were devoted to astronomy and skillful in other sciences and arts. It was not long before the Caras began to extend their domains toward the interior, and in the latter part of the tenth century they completed their conquest of the country by taking possession of Quito, which became the capital of the nation.

From that date until 1450 the country remained subject to the Scyries, and in a state of peace and comparatively advanced civilization. In 1450 the country was invaded by the Incas from the south, who, after a long and bloody war, finally succeeded in capturing Quito. The country then became a province of the Inca Empire, and so remained until 1534, when the Spaniards took possession.

Ecuador has at present an estimated population of 1,500,000 and an area of 22,840 square leagues. A large portion of its territory is yet to be explored, particularly that lying on the trans-Andean side, which is reported to possess good soil, rich forests, and in some districts valuable mineral deposits.

The chief industry of Ecuador is agriculture. The principal products are cocoa, coffee, ivory, nuts, cane sugar, rubber, rice and tobacco. The principal port is Guayaquil, situated on the Guayas river, thirty-six miles from the gulf. It has an estimated population of 70,000 and is the most important commercial city in the country.

Quito, the capital of the republic, is situated in the interior, on the high table-lands in the central part of the Province of Pichincha, at the foot of the eastern slope of the (extinct) volcano of the same name, and on the northern bank of the Machangara river, a small tributary of the Rio Guallabamba. The city of Quito proper is quadrangular and lies about 9,500 feet above sea level, some fifteen miles south of the equator. The streets are straight, generally crossing at right angles, very uneven, on account of the difference in elevation in different parts of the city, and few of them are more than twenty feet wide. The streets are paved with cobblestones, and the sidewalks, which are also narrow, are paved with small rough flagstones from a quarry in the vicinity. The houses are usually two stories in height, built of adobe, with flat roofs of red tiles. There are few windows facing the streets, the rooms of the houses being lighted from an inner courtyard surrounded by balconies above. The entrance to the courtyard, which also leads to the main entrance of the building, is generally high enough to admit a mounted horseman. Heating is not provided for, though sometimes the temperature drops to the freezing point. The stores are small and usually without windows.

The streets are lighted by electricity. Water, which is obtained from the adjacent mountain, is delivered to the city through public fountains or brought in jars from the mountain. At present that served through the fountains is badly contaminated. Ice is brought from the mountain and is also manufactured. Drainage is facilitated by the inclination of the streets, the number of natural drains, and the heavy rainfall.

In the city of Quito are five "Plazas" or squares; a botanical garden; a hippodrome, and two public promenades, the larger being shaded with eucalyptus, oak and other trees. The city also has five public libraries, two museums of natural history, two chemical laboratories, an arsenal, several hospitals, two banks and five hotels. There are within its limits thirty-three churches and six convents, occupying nearly one-fourth of its area. The Franciscan Monastery, said to be the largest in the world, possesses extensive farms in the vicinity, and its various buildings occupy an entire square. The most conspicuous buildings are the Government Palace, President's Palace, Archbishop's Palace, Palace of Justice, Municipal Building, Sucre Theatre, and the Astronomical Observatory. Education is provided for by a university, four colleges, a medical school, an institute of science, a school of arts and trades, an academy of fine arts, a theological school, three seminaries, and three schools for young ladies. A telephone service is maintained. Manufacturing interests are represented by twenty-two flour mills, a number of breweries, and a sugar refinery. There are also establishments engaged in the manufacture of woolen blankets, ponchos, bayetas, common carpets, matting, shoes, Indian felt hats, furniture, pottery, saddles, carts, adobe, hard bricks, roofing, tiles, chocolate, cheese and candles.

Quito is noted for the large quantities of religious painting and sculpture done within its limits and exported to adjacent countries. Lace and embroideries are also made. Other important industries are the carving and coloring of small figures from vegetable ivory, and the drying of bird skins, particularly the skins of humming birds brought from the Napo river by the Indians. The city has telegraphic connections. Severe earthquakes were experienced in the years 1844, 1859, and 1887. The population is estimated to be 80,000. The distance from Guayaquil to Quito is 280 miles, and can be covered in two days' travel.

In 1900 the exports from Ecuador were valued at $7,835,856, of which $1,622,163 went to the United States. The imports for the same year were valued at $6,708,439, of which $1,715,215 came from the United States. The exports in 1906 were valued at $11,690,243, of which $3,920,776 went to the United States. The imports for the same period were valued at $8,505,800, of which $2,328,450 came from the United States.

It may be well to remark that the bulk of the imports come from Europe. Furthermore, owing to the many years of experience that the European manufacturers have had in doing business with this country, during which time they have made a careful study of the requirements of its people, and also to their system of allowing long time credits, it is safe to assume that the American manufacturer, in order to break these long welded ties, will find it necessary to offer to the importers special inducements in the way of low prices, prompt and careful execution of orders, etc.

In preparing to meet competition in this country, it must be borne in mind that nearly all the merchants here have from the very beginning of their business careers acquired a disposition to buy from European manufacturers, sometimes on account of the broad terms allowed them, and at other times on account of closer business relations existing. It is not uncommon for European concerns to extend a credit of from six to twelve months. In selecting agents to send here, only those who can speak the language of the country should be chosen. Catalogues and correspondence should also be in the same language. I may further add that the chief cause attributed to the United States not supplying a greater proportion of the trade is their neglect to cater to the demands of this market. A further hindrance is faulty packing and higher freight rates.

Shippers should give special attention to the packing and preparation of merchandise that is to be dispatched to this country. It should be lightly packed, but well protected, for the reason that duties are collected on the gross weight. Every package, besides marks and address, must also have the gross weight marked in kilograms. They should also take great care to comply with the customs law and secure a certificate from the Ecuadoran consul, whose duty involves the signing of invoices and manifests (Sobordos). A list of bales and packages delivered to vessels for Ecuadoran ports, for which no bill of lading has been secured, must also be presented to the consul, by the agents of said vessels, before such vessels depart. The list will contain the shipper's and consignee's name, port of destination, gross and net weight in kilos, and declared value.
